Course Descriptions:

CORE 390-13A: Senior Seminar: The "Balanced" Life?: Classical and Contemporary Accounts of Relations Among Family, Church and Society

Instructor: Kari-Shane Davis

What does it mean for men and women to live "good" lives in their homes, workplaces, and social structures of our day? This course will introduce students to a range of perspectives on marriage and family, and interactions between families, society, and religious communities. The approach will be interdisciplinary and ecumenical, but we will accent families in the contemporary U.S. in relation to Christian communities, particularly the Roman Catholic tradition. Drawing on religious and other sources [historical, sociological, cultural], students will have an opportunity to (1) give explicit and focused attention to central questions concerning the intersection of family, church and society like marriage, divorce, homosexuality, gender roles, race/class issues (2) increase their understanding of the insights, directions, and visions a Christian moral perspective offers to men and women struggling to participate in families and society in the 21st century

CORE 390-30A: Senior Seminar: MORAL ISSUES AND THE ARTS (British Studies Program)

Instructor: Phil Welter

While generally reflecting the society from which they come, the arts often deal with issues of moral concern as their subject matter. This course will examine the manner and effect of the arts' response to their society and to these issues and will consider their potential impact on the individual. We will read/listen to and study selected plays and musical compositions while at the same time considering various ethical systems and their application.

We use an ethics text (James Rachels, Mike Martin or Vincent Ruggiero) and I provide a large number of supplemental materials for the theater and music dimensions. Past practices and opportunities would, in my mind, justify offering the global flag and FA designation. There has often been more than a hint of humanities inquiry as well as a gender presence. If there are folks who might be in need of any of these designations I could design special features into the course for them to satisfy the criteria.

CORE 390-32A: Senior Seminar: Living a moral and ethical life (Graeco Roman Program)

Instructor: Jerome Tupa

This course is meant to help us look at the world of the Greeks and the Romans and how these writings from the past are mirrors to see ourselves and our journey today. Through these books we will begin to see how others have been challenged to be seekers and to live with intentionality. We need to ask ourselves how we live in our world. In Athens and Rome, our classrooms, we will explore our spiritual quest, our intellectual quest and our emotional quest as have countless people who have already made this journey.

Our course is about exploring human lives – our lives- in the context of these two diverse cultures. We are going to live away from our known home for 14 weeks. Being dislocated we will try to explore the value of literary works and their importance in creating a context for moral and ethical thinking. We will look at the role of gender in relationship to history and the relationship of ourselves to our culture. We can look at the role of time in our lives as suggest the quotations below.

"Had we but world enough and time...But at my back I always hear Time's winged chariot drawing near" (Andrew Marvell)

"Everything changed the day she figured out there was exactly enough time for the important things in her life" (B.Andreas, artist).

In order to help the process of critical and moral decision making, we will discuss poems and novels in small groups and from time to time students will lead the larger group in discussions about living in Greece and Italy today. Students will prepare a 1 page reflection paper for each class on an ethical or moral element that they find significant in their readings.

Students will be evaluated on reflection papers, presentations and a final creative project linking their personal passion and how that passion fits into their life's journey.

Texts for the road:

Renault: The Last of the Wine
Nicolas Gage: Eleni
Stone: The Agony and the Ecstasy
Rumi: Essential Rumi
