

You know you're an Environmental Studies major when...

- 1. You got up early on a Saturday to help clean chickens
- 2. You have been to the power house at SJU [St. John's University]
- 3. You know where your water comes from and ends up on campus
- 4. You go camping as part of class
- 5. You know what GIS stands for
- 6. You call your professors by their first name
- 7. You eat Yak burgers at a cookout rather than beef
- 8. You've ever met someone at the co-op
- 9. You go trayless everyday
- 10. You take a class from almost every department as part of your major requirements
- 11. Your recycling bin is fuller than your trash can
- 12. Excess packaging is one of your pet peeves
- 13. You can recite "That is right which causes the greatest good for the greatest number" from memory
- 14. You can define the tragedy of the commons
- 15. Grist.org is your most visited website
- 16. You don't only wear flannel to be funny
- 17. You wear socks with your Chocos in December
- 18. You are stressing as to when you'll find produce after the farmers market season ends
- 19. There ARE bricks in your toilet
- 20. You know how many gallons per minute your showerhead uses
- 21. You know which fish is the most important fish in the sea
- 22. Conventional education no longer satisfies you, the motions of predictability become too secure, and you start demanding more
