WHY STUDY GENDER STUDIES

Gender shapes the world we live in and informs each of our lives. A major or minor in Gender Studies prepares students to better understand themselves, their relationships, and our society. Gender Studies graduates are well prepared to work in a diverse workplace environment and/or to be effective advocates for social justice. Our program allows students to take courses in a wide range of disciplines, which makes it possible to create a major or minor that matches your individual interests. Gender Studies courses emphasize the ways in which gender interacts with other aspects of identity, such as race, sexuality, gender identity, culture, and ability.

Our students describe our classes as eye-opening and enriching. The in-depth knowledge of diversity, equity, inclusion, and justice our students develop helps our graduates be more informed friends, family members, and citizens; it also makes our graduates more marketable in their chosen professions. Gender Studies alums have pursued many diverse career paths, including law, medicine, marketing, counseling, and education.

GEND COURSES

GEND 101: Introduction to Gender Studies
Introduces students to a broad range of concepts and issues in the discipline of Gender Studies. It also serves as a practical and theoretical foundation for further courses in Gender Studies. It uses gender as an analytical method and explores how race, class, ethnicity, and sexual orientation influence the construction of gender identity. Although containing these common elements, this course’s main focus will vary according to the particular instructor’s design.

GEND 377A: Disability Justice
Ableism is a system of discrimination and oppression targeting those who identify as being disabled, or those whom society has labeled disabled. Globally over 1 billion people live with some form of disability (WHO, 2014). This course will focus on the human experience of disability using a “Disability Justice Framework.” This framework was created by disability activists in the mid-2000’s who were queer, poor, and people of color trying to make sense of their experiences and create a movement that did not exclude others with multiple experiences of marginalization and oppression. This framework challenges our ideas of “independence” as being central to those who identify as being disabled, to that of “inter-dependent” with the whole community being involved. This framework also challenges our norms of what constitute “whole” bodies versus “broken” bodies and that “brokenness” must be fixed for people to live “whole” lives. In this course we deconstruct false and limited narratives on what it means to be disabled, and at the same time, act in solidarity for the liberation of every “body.”

COMMUNICATION

COMM 305: Gender, Voice & Power
This class asks students to answer the questions: What is a voice and how does one’s gender dictate its use, power, and agency? We will engage with both historical and contemporary voices in order to consider how gender presents unique challenges (and offers advantages) to participation in the public sphere. We will analyze the persuasive styles of a variety of women and men throughout history as they negotiated gendered social, religious, and political spaces. We will study trailblazers, historical debates/moments, and gender theory to understand how power is negotiated, controlled, and seized. Course Attributes: Humanities (HM), CSD: Systems (CS)

PEACE STUDIES

PCST 123 Islam in the USA: Race, Gender, and Ethnicity
After introducing Islam, this course examines gender, race, and ethnicity, among Muslims in the United States. It analyzes American Muslims’ conceptions of gender, and those conceptions’ relationships with historical ideas about gender in Islam while examining the relationships between ethnicity and religiosity among the largest ethnic groups of Muslims in the United States which include Arabs and non-Arab Middle Easterners, South Asians, and African Americans. The course will examine the role of race among persons in those and other groups in the United States. The course will give attention to Somalis in Minnesota, virtually all of whom are Muslims, their religiosity, and the similar and dissimilar sociological patterns with respect to them and other Muslims in the United States with respect to gender, race, and ethnicity. Offered for A-F grading only.

Dr. Jon Armajani  TR  8:20am-9:40am  BAC
PCST 351 Gender and Peace
This course will explore the connections between gender and peace in theory and practice, from micro-level gender violence to macro-level international conflicts. We will study theories relating gendered notions of human nature to violence and peace, to militarism and other forms of institutionalized violence, and to violence against women. Other topics may include the relationships between motherhood, fatherhood, and peace, along with theoretical and practical connections between feminism and nonviolence.

PSCT 368C/THEO 369C: Islam and Gender
This course will focus on the various ways in which relations between Muslim women and men have been appropriated, interpreted, and concretized in a variety of real-life situations throughout the early, medieval, and modern periods in Islam with a regional focus on Islam and gender in the Middle East, North Africa, South Asia, Europe, and/or North America. This course will use gender as a primary lens of analysis for examining course content by examining the, at times static and at other times dynamic, roles of women and men in societies where Muslims are in the majority and others where they are the minority in order to gain an understanding of the relationship between appropriations of gender with respect to Islam and its corresponding cultural contexts. PHILOSOPHY

PHIL 325: Feminist Ethics
This course will examine how women's experiences and philosophical reflection on those experiences offer important and necessary perspectives in the field of moral and ethical thinking. Topics may include the nature of feminism, freedom and oppression; the role of care, trust, autonomy, reason and emotion in the moral life, and a consideration of how feminism has come to challenge basic premises and conceptual tools of traditional, western approaches to ethics and moral reasoning. The course will also explore social/ethical issues stemming from the intersection of gender with race, ethnicity, culture, class, and/or sexuality.

PSYCHOLOGY (approval pending, talk with Jean Keller)

PSYC 108 Psychology of Gender
In this course, we will examine psychological research and practice through the lens of gender. We will explore gender as a psychological and social construct that influences our experiences in a number of contexts. The course will address how gender, as a social identity, relates to privilege, oppression, and emotional well-being. Sample topics include: gender roles, stereotypes, gender socialization, and gender inequality. Moreover, we will take an intersectional perspective, attending to the complex ways that gender combines with race and other social identities. As we engage with a broad survey of scholarship on the psychology of gender, we will grapple with controversial issues confronting the field of psychology and consider both personal and professional applications.

SOCI 337P Love, Sex & Marriage
Families are universal, yet their form varies widely across the globe. People hold strong ideas about who belongs to their family, what responsibilities family members have towards each other, who they can have sex with, and who they should marry. While our ideas about family seem natural and rigid, they are in fact eminently flexible and constantly changing. Kinship is a term used in anthropology to mean the web of social relations that make up families. In considering the different ways that people come to see themselves as related to one another, we will examine familial practices of different cultures, and consider how contemporary social changes like new reproductive technologies, migration, and transnational marriage are shaping family life around the world.
