I looked at that photograph for a long time. It was a photograph of a woman who, after a lifetime of hiding, now wanted to be seen. It was a photograph of someone who could only be herself beneath a pitch-black burqa. Twenty-eight years into her life, Margaret Marcus had been transformed. Through this veil Maryam Jameelah saw the world and her place in it with absolute clarity.

DEBORAH BAKER