ABSTRACT: Collection contains records of the St. John's University School of Theology and Seminary. This includes its predecessors: the graduate-level seminary prior to 1950, the School of Divinity, and the Graduate School of Sacred Studies; the Benedictine Institute of Sacred Theology's records are in a separate archival collection.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE: The collection includes minutes, correspondence, reports, lists, statistics, newsletters, financial records, brochures and other documents. University Archives has master's theses and graduate papers from 1961 to 2003. There are also some photographs. Topics include the Jerusalem study abroad program, the permanent diaconate program, summer sessions, student government, alumni, and grants.

ADMINISTRATIVE HISTORY: St. John's Seminary was chartered in 1857 for the "education of youths." It was more popularly called St. John's College. In 1883, the school's official name became St. John's University. Although the early course of studies was modeled on the German gymnasium, it was, at the same time, the educational foundation needed for theological studies. When student numbers were small, aspirants to the priesthood received individual instruction. A theological seminary was organized in 1868, for both monastic and diocesan seminarians. In 1950, St. John's Seminary of the Diocese of St. Cloud opened. The diocese was responsible for spiritual formation of seminarians, while St. John's furnished the academic program.

In 1957, the Benedictine Institute of Sacred Theology was founded to offer graduate theological education for Benedictine sisters. Summer sessions were conducted at the College of St. Benedict, with the courses under the auspices of St. John's University. In 1964, the graduate school was formally organized as a division of St. John's University. The Graduate School of Sacred Studies offered accredited master's degree programs in theology, and was open to lay and religious order students as well as seminarians.

In 1978, the School of Divinity (the seminary academic program) and the Graduate School merged, forming the School of Theology. In 1988, the Diocese of St. Cloud gave the seminary building to St. John's, and the Abbey became responsible for all aspects of the St. John's Seminary program. The graduate program was then called St. John's University School of Theology and Seminary. In 2007, St. John's decided to no longer recruit diocesan seminarians, but to continue to offer a seminary program for monastic candidates for ordination.

The Rector of the Seminary has an ecclesiastical role, ensuring that the Church's expectations are met in the training of candidates for ordination. The Dean of the Graduate School is an academic administrator, with responsibility for the graduate-level academic program as a major division of the University. Sometimes a single person has performed both functions.
