Director's Note:

For me, creating dance has always been a collaborative endeavor—working with real bodies in real time to discover how we might share space together, and create movement that has meaning for us and for an audience. Our production of Kinespheric Encounters is no exception! You are about to see 50 dancers on stage, including work by three student dance clubs, members from the community, students enrolled in dance courses and several individual dancers who auditioned for the show. Additionally, student lighting and costume designers have collaborated with the choreographers to create original designs under the mentorship of our talented tech/design faculty and staff. Industrious scenic and costume crews have spent hours crafting the landscape and attire for our dances, and our entire team has rallied to promote the show. I would like to extend my most heartfelt thanks to everyone involved, especially Isabel and Jackie, our student stage manager and assistant director. We hope that you enjoy the array of dances we have created, and the myriad ways we encounter one another in the kinesphere.
